Hanley stammed the big grout door and backed away and ran around to the Bleecker Street side where he atstampted to climb a window behind the firing line of the embattled cierts He could not make the climb and went back again to the front door. All this time the rattle of the revolvers and the unkling of glass and the shouts of the clorks inside calling encouragement to each other continued.

At the front door again Hanley shouted at the top of his voice: Hey, quit your shoetles in there. I'm a policeman and I was get your man if you'll quit."

The fring slackenes and stopped as the blue clad figure of the policeman appeared in the doorway. In front of him Hanley saw Mr. Bird crouching with a revelver levelled at the little man with the overcoal who was down on his hands and knees under the counter at the very front of the count-

The Heaven of Sorrow

By DR. MERTHOLD A. BAER

To comply with the request of his many friends, Mr. Frank E. Campbell has decided to publish in book form my Essays about The Funeral Church, profusely illustrated with photographs of the entire Institution and its many treasures of art.

The Funeral Church is called "The Heaven of Sorrow," for within its walls sorrow finds consolation, grief finds relief.

The Funeral Church is the home of the bereaved; it is more: it is the home of the dead. There is nothing in The Funeral Church but what is beautiful and inspiring. The parlors—the home of he demised-make you forget the darkness of sorrow. The Church wherein ministers of all denominations preach the word of the Lord is unique in its construction. The forty-thousand-dollar organ, recently purchased by Mr. Campbell, will later be installed and will surely prove a work of admiration and inspiration. The issue of the book will be a limited one. you wish to obtain a copy, write at once and a book
